Will Kitty and Boots be able to feed their growing family?

Meow Mansion is a gingerbread installation that tells the story of two unneutered cats, Kitty and Boots, and their rapidly expanding family.

“We love our little fluffkins” dotes Kitty.
“But baby, my salary isn’t big enough to keep feeding all the kittens” says Boots.

This year, the pair prepares to celebrate their second Christmas with 65 of their offsprings. Next year, they nervously expect some 300 more kittens to join the festivity with 2015 more meows the following year and 11,801 purring cuties a year after that (and, in case you wondered, 2 million feline relatives by their eight Christmas!).

Could they go on feeding them all?

“Maybe, baby, we should get neutered” suggests Boots. “Would avoid sending our darlings on the street.” Kitty agrees.

Help cats like Kitty and Boots enjoy a cosy family festive fun by supporting your local cat charity.

This Christmas, artist Kazz Morohashi teams up with Cats Protection, a leading UK organization promoting feline wellbeing.

Together, they encourage more people to support a happy healthy population of cats by neutering and rescuing purring felines friends.
